On my 2004 Nissan X-Trail 2.2 DCI (70,000 miles, FSH) I had a problem where the engine would not rev at about 2500rpm. It didn't stall, had been running perfectly and corrected itself when I switched off and restarted it. Am I right in thinking it was a temporary management system issue, and should I get it checked out? It's been running fine ...

This is your engine management light, it comes on when the computer or ECU that controls your engine and its emissions detects a fault through or with one of its sensors. As it is computer controlled you will need to get it tested on a diagnostic scanner to see which fault codes are present, you don't have to go to a main dealer as most good garages have the kit for this.
